Response to Question 5(b):

Intel Corporation has a number of grants, cooperative agreements, software licenses and other transactions with various federal agencies, including DARPA, NSF and USAF. Work performed under these agreements has primarily been in silicon photonics component research and fundamental research in ubiquitous computing, although we also have licensed commercial off-the-shelf software to some federal agencies. The amounts involved in these grants and contracts have ranged from several hundred thousand dollars or less up to 30 million dollars. If there is interest in receiving more information on these contracts, please let us know.
